stable keepers and others a quarterly tax of from $5 to $120 per quarter. This bill is one of the most glaring instances of humbug and foolishness that has yet made its appearance in the Nineteenth Legislature. Only farmers and stockmen are exempt from this special tax. Should the bill pass the Council we will rely on the good sense of the House to kill the measure.

Miss M. Stambaugh, of Salt Lake City, the blind vocalist and lecturer, gave an exhibition of her talent at the opera house Thursday night to quite a large audience. ## DIED.

DUNBAR—On Thursday night, March 4, 1897, at Williams, of heart disease, Mrs. Dunbar, wife of W. W. Dunbar; aged 35 years.

The news of Mrs. Dunbar's death was a sad shock to the people of our neighboring town, and to her friends and acquaintances here. She had been visiting Thursday evening at the home of F. R. Nellis and appeared to be in her usual good health. A few hours after her return to her home she was stricken with an attack of heart failure and her death was quiet and peaceable.

She leaves a husband and an adopted boy, Clarence, aged 10 years. At the time of her death Mr. Dunbar was in Randsburg, whither he had removed sometime ago. He was sent for but could not come, being himself down with a serious illness and near death's door.

Deceased was esteemed most highly by everyone who knew her, and sympathized with in her many trials and troubles.

Her relatives reside in Earlville, Ill., and orders were telegraphed from there to ship the body to that point. Undertaker Edgar Whipple of Flagstaff was sent for and embalmed the remains Monday. The body was placed aboard No. 2 Tuesday morning and accompanied by young Clarence, started on its long journey to Illinois.

The business men of Williams felt called upon to show their regard for Mrs. Dunbar and her bright little boy in some way. Tickets had been sent on from Illinois, so the merchants raised a neat little sum of money among themselves and presented it to Clarence to defer his traveling expenses. No funeral services were held in Williams; the ceremonies will take place in Earlville, Ill.

Mrs. C. K. Mathews and little son, who was the playmate of Master Clarence, accompanied him as far as Flagstaff on his lonely journey.
